CONTENTS

VIII. EXPRESSION AND MEANING .................................................. 222

IX. UNIVERSALS AND ABSTRACTION ........................................... 244

X. THE ANALYSIS OF WHOLEs AND PARTS ................................. 283
A. Independent and dependent objects, 284. 1. Analytic and synthetic propositions, 294. 2. Relative independence and dependence, 296. B. The theory of pure forms of wholes and parts, 297. 1. The concept of foundation (Fundierung) and relevant theorems, 297. 2. Transition to the more important part-relations, 299. 3. Reciprocal and one-sided, mediate and immediate foundation, 299. 4. Definition of portion, factor, physical part, abstractum, concretum, 300. 5. The difference between mediate and immediate parts of a whole, 301. 6. Nearer and more remote parts of a whole, 302. 7. The concepts of whole and part defined by means of the concept of foundation, 304. 8. Sensory forms of unity and wholes, 305. 9. Categorial forms of unity and wholes, 307. 10. The pure formal types of wholes and parts, and the postulate of an a priori theory, 309. 11. On the partition of wholes through the partition of their factors, 309.

XI. PURE GRAMMAR AND THE ANALYSIS OF MEANING ............... 313
CONTENTS

avoidance of nonsense and absurdity, and the idea of pure-logical grammar, 328. M. Pure-logical grammar and its philosophic significance, 331.

XII. INTENTIONAL EXPERIENCES AND THEIR "CONTENTS" 333

XIII. OBJECTIVATING INTENTIONS AND FULFILLMENTS 388
A. Meaning-intention and meaning-fulfillment, 392. 1. The expression of an act; formulation of the theme, 392. 2. The expression of a perception ("perceptual judgment"), 394. 3. Perception as an act determining but not containing meaning, 395. 4. The static unity between expressing thoughts and expressed intuition; recognition (Erkennen), 397. 5. Recognition as an act-character and the "generality of a word," 398. 6. Dynamic

XIV. SENSIBILITY AND UNDERSTANDING

A. Sensuous and categorial intuitions, 448. 1. The problem of the fulfillment of categorial meaning-forms, 448. 2. The difference between sensuous and categorial form in the total sphere of objectivating acts, 451. 3. The objective correlates of the categorial forms no "real" factors, 452. 4. The origin of the concept of being and of the remaining categories as not in the domain of inner perception, 453. 5. Enlargement of the concept of intuition; sensuous and categorial intuition, 455. 6. Phenomenological analysis of the distinction between sensuous and categorial perception, 456. 7. Characterization of sense perception as "simple" perception, 457. 8. Characterization of categorial acts as founded acts, 459. 9. Conjunctions and disjunctions, 461. 10. General objects constituted in general intuitions, 462. B. The a priori laws of genuine and figurative thought, 464. 1. Complication to ever new forms; the pure form-theory of possible intuitions, 464. 2. The relative or functional distinction between matter and form; sensuous concepts and categories, 464. 3. The categorial formation no real transformation of the object, 466. 4. The freedom in the categorial formation of pre-given substance and its limits; the purely categorial laws (laws of "genuine" thought), 467. 5. The new laws of validity of suggestive and signitively obscure acts (laws of figurative thought), 470. 6. The pure logical-grammatical laws: their psychological significance and their normative function with respect to inadequate thought, 473. 7. The absurd problem of "the real meaning of the logical," 474. 8. Distinctions confused in the usual contrast of "intuition" and "thought," 476. 9. That not every meaning involves recognition, 478. C. Supplement: outer and inner perception; physical and psychical phenomena, 479. 1. The traditional distinction, 479. 2. Inner and outer perception, and their relation to apperception, 482. 3. The meaning of "appearance," 483. 4. Physical and psychical phenomena; adequate and inadequate perception, 484. 5. The classification of phenomena; Brentano's confusion, 487.
CONTENTS

XV. THE PHENOMENOLOGICAL PHILOSOPHY OF LOGIC ........ 489
A. The phenomenological significance of the Logical Investigations, 489. B. Contributions toward a philosophy of logic, 492. C. The critique of formal logic and the program of transcendental logic, 495. 1. Levels of logical analysis, 495. 2. The principles of logic and the system of forms, 500. 3. The formal apophantic and formal ontology, 501. D. Origin-analysis and the constitution of logical forms, 503.

XVI. THE TECHNIQUE FOR A PRESUPPOSITIONLESS PHILOSOPHY 511

XVII. THE SIGNIFICANCE OF PHENOMENOLOGY ............... 537
A. The goal of an absolutely founded philosophy, 537. B. Phenomenology and its paradoxes, 543. C. The proper function of phenomenological analysis, 560. 1. The interpretation of the given and its analysis, 561. 2. The purely cognitive level of analysis, 563. 3. Phenomenological questions and intermethodological judgments, 565. 4. Some prominent misunderstandings of phenomenology, 566. D. Historical meaning and the approach to philosophy, 569. 1. Method as a response to problems, 569. 2. Historical and sedimented meaning, 570. 3. The problem of objective truth, 571. 4. The priority of phenomenology and the cooperation of methods, 572.

INDEX ........................................... 575